THE STORY :

16-year-old Jacob 'Jake' Portman (Asa Butterfield) is forced to travel to a Welsh island filled with mystery in order to discover the truth of what really happened to his grandfather (Terence Stamp). Jake's ordinary life takes an extraordinary turn as the childhood fairytales he heard from his grandfather start to become more plausible.

OUR REVIEW :

This is a sort of classic time-travel mystery. The movies have long made room for phantasmagoric visionaries, the strange ones, the different ones, who like to peek under rocks to peer at what squirms beneath.

'Miss Peregrine's Home for Peculiar Children' is so crowded with incident that it sometimes seems in danger of imploding. The children are ideally cast, even if one is playing an invisible boy and two others are obscured by delectably creepy masks. Tim Burton has always had an affinity for the peculiar, so how could he resist Miss Peregrine? Miss Peregrine is a Mary Poppins for society's rejects. Nazi bombs destroyed her Victorian orphanage on the Welsh island of Cairnholm during World War II. But do you think bombs can really touch her or her young charges?... Engaging, watchable, with sweet-natured freewheeling eccentricity.
